Many people contributed to the preparation of this history of the Engineer Studies Center. The commander/directors of ESC, Colonel Richard T. Robinson, USA (Ret.), and Colonel Robert D. Carpenter, USA, provided encouragement and advice. The technical directors, George H. Orrell and Dean Considine, consented to lengthy interviews on their experiences with the center and carefully critiqued the manuscript. Their encouragement and support made this history better and the task of preparing it more satisfying and enjoyable than might otherwise have been the case. The members of the Historical Advisory Committee, composed of John J. Taylor, Robert B. Bockting, Jill M. Davis, Dr. Lawrence A. Lang, and Marvin Marceron, read the manuscript and provided many valuable suggestions for improving it. G. Leslie Geiger served as chairperson of the committee and coordinator of the project. In addition to the significant contributions Leslie made to the history, she also performed the important function of shepherding the author through the sometimes complicated processes involved in producing this book. Ruth Haley, ESC's librarian, responded helpfully to every request for assistance. Under the admirable and patient direction of Doreen Myers, the Word Processing Center produced draft after draft of the manuscript. The Visual Information Office under Chris Lew assisted with the illustrations. Mr. Lew supervised the publication of the history.

Dr. John Greenwood, Chief of the Historical Division, Office of the Chief of Engineers, and his staff provided valuable assistance in the research for this history. Dr. Frank N. Schubert of the Historical Division read the manuscript and made many helpful suggestions. To all these individuals and others who helped in a variety of ways, and to my friends who were both supportive and forbearing, I wish to express my appreciation. All of them helped in correcting errors of commission and omission. Any that remain are the author's responsibility.
